

(A.O.3)-Red Death, The

(Danger:6 {Biological threat to humanity})

Containment Procedure:

If the bacterium of the Red Death gets out, refer to Protocol Draconiam. If the actual man escapes, capture him; all personnel which are tasked with capturing A.O.3 must wear a full protective hazmat suit which must be fireproof as the suits will be burnt after used

Description:

A.O.3 is the failed result of “combining a drugged homeless bum and some synthetic bacteria(A.O.3-1) species known as Redacted.” It is a pale, Caucasian man that seems to be in his sixties, who wears a purple cloak which hides his entire person. The experiment that created this anomalous object is the Odergon experiments, which were created to explore the effects of some incomplete-bacteria from a crashed meteorite at Redacted.

The dark cloak that he wears apparently is apart of his physiology which is common with SCP-049.

A.O.3 has the ability to, on command, release an airborne bacterial disease known as A.O.3-1 . This sub anomaly is a disease that is resistant to antibiotics, however we have managed to synthesize a vaccine, and so all USACA personnel must take the vaccine in order to enter Site-Redacted. The bacterium itself is not harmful to other organisms except for humans. This disease, if it enters the bloodstream, is able to replicate rapidly in the heart of the human until it explodes under pressure, causing instant death.

Notes:

- The last words of the head researcher, Doctor Redacted, of the failed experiment were “Please, please, please, do not ever recreate this again.”
- This bacteria is used to execute people who have committed treason against the United States in a controlled and safe manner.
- Researcher Lux: “I feel bad about the researchers at Odergon, If only they wore the safety suits, they would have been fine.”

Incidents:

- Incident (A.O.3)-1: A worker at a secure laboratory in the Redacted dropped a vile of the bacteria that was used on A.O.3 in the lab. It was quickly burned.
 - Researcher Lux: “I don’t understand why we are still researching this. We already know it kills all life.”
- Incident (A.O.3)-2: A.O.3 appeared to kill a woman at the touch of his hand and spread A.O.3-1. The A.O states in innocence “That wasn’t supposed to happen. I swear.” The body was torched using compound Gamma-Epsilon.
